

STRAWBERRY FEST IDEAS

We could use the Chris Van Dusen theme and go with a “If I Designed (Built) A Town!” (Paul Seidman suggested we used “designed” instead of “built” to avoid perceptions that the plan is all about new buildings.)

If I Designed a TOWN

We could have several copies of these books out on display and then have:

1. Simple, medium-sized black and white copies of Cape that leave room for additional drawings.
2. One very large map of Cape that kids and adults can add their own suggestions to — either directly on the map or pasting up their own drawings on square sheets of paper that we provide with markers.

3. Or a miscellaneous selection of cardboard boxes, empty towel rolls, construction paper, scissors, tape, etc. to build individual structures.

The other idea I came up with was running with the Minecraft theme (a digital gaming/building platform). There is actually a spin-off called Towncraft. All kids and parents know Minecraft.

Using similar fonts, we could call it Capecraft and then have:

1. Minecraft-like building material that kids could use to build things and then either take them home or attach them to a very large, map of Cape ... either horizontally or vertically displayed (on a table).
2. Include a visual list of available options; sidewalks, town square, shuttles, swimming pool, etc., which kids can use to place on the map.

I pulled together some quotes below that we could possibly use on promotional stickers/flyers ... or even on the polling question.
